EDUCATION UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON (2005-present)
Ph.D., Political Science (expected completion date: June 2010)

- Dissertation: “Norm Transmission in Networks of Intergovernmental Organizations.” Supervised by Aseem Prakash (co-chair), Michael D. Ward (co-chair), James A. Caporaso, Rachel A. Cichowski, and Peter D. Hoff (Department of Statistics).
- Abstract: This project examines the conditions under which networks of intergovernmental organizations (IGOs) can serve as “transmission belts” for the diffusion of norms among states. It employs a three-stage model of norm diffusion that takes account of the characteristics of the states “sending” the norm, the characteristics of the IGOs that connect states to each other, and the characteristics of the states that “receive” the norm. This model is used to test competing hypotheses about the role that socialization and coercion play in the transmission of a number of different human rights norms, including labor rights and women’s rights.
