The compound of five cubes is the only object in this image to not be categorized under complex analysis. The other three figures in this image include a plot of $|\arctan(z^{-5})|$ (read: “the absolute value of arctan of z to the negative five”), a Riemann surface of \sqrt{z} (read: “square root of z”), and a plot of the complex gamma function. Despite the description in this image, an abacus is unlikely to help with any of the aforementioned figures. Later variants of this meme sometimes included descriptive caption text like “TRIANGLES”, even though captions in the original meme were just increasing numbers of red (*) question marks. For ten points, name this PSA with many academic variants that insists people should cease engaging in a certain activity, making comments like “Statements dreamed up by the utterly Deranged” and ending by declaring “They have played us for absolute fools.”

ANSWER: STOP DOING MATH [prompt on descriptive answers by asking “what’s the title of the meme?”]

This artist’s songs regularly feature questionable lyrics like “I swear there’s a lot of vegetables out there” and “I will disguise myself as a sleeping pill / and descend inside of you”. After nearly four years of inactivity, this artist suddenly released a four-level ARG on social media in 2022. Before hiatus, his last YouTube release was a remix of a song about rejecting a record label’s offer to follow his dreams; that song was “Fiji Water”, the first track on his “Cinematic” album. This artist previously helped write music for Disneyland’s Paint the Night parade after he wrote the credits song to a popular (*) 2012 Disney movie. That parade’s main theme was a remix of that song, with new lyrics like “I never want this to end” that replaced the original titular lyric “when can I see you again?”. For ten points, name this music project by Adam Young, the artist of “Vanilla Twilight” and “Fireflies”.

ANSWER: Owl City [accept Adam Young before mention]

Tostdown 3

After saying he would remove his previous Spotify tracks in his “memes that make me commit tiny laugh” video, the only currently available releases by this artist are the 2022 “Emotional Piano” album and “Cinematic Scenes” single. One music video by this artist shows him playing a cardboard drawing of a piano, as well as an actual Nintendo Labo cardboard piano. Another music video by this artist shows him searching for and buying () large quantities of an item to decorate a wall in his house. In his “how to” videos, this artist gives specific musical instructions like “must be played without feeling” and telling the viewer to use “exactly three coins”. One easter egg in this software can be accessed by typing “Betchacant”, which randomly gives one of eight possible options, such as “Outstretched Arm”, “Checkerboard Inversion”, and “Fireworks!”. While users of this software have used it to make semi-popular musical covers of Nyan Cat and Moonlight Sonata, more popular content just involves making “fun glissandi” and “cursed sounds” using this software. Junferno’s usage of this software is some of his most popular content, where he uses it to render 2D animations of Renai Circulation and Bad Apple using () Bezier curves. Although this software does not have built-in 3D support, their help center shows how to mimic a 3D appearance using parametric equations. Because of its lack of 3D support, you may have used Geogebra or Wolfram|Alpha instead of this software for Math 126. For ten points, name this web application you have probably only ever used for its intended purpose as a graphing calculator.

ANSWER: Desmos

Out of five possible default options, the first one of these images was entirely grey and white. Another one of these images that also used mostly two colours featured a winged creature, and those two colours were reddish-orange and black. Animals are featured prominently in these images, including one with a multicoloured dolphin. However, the only animal to appear in more than one of these images is a bee. When someone initially mistook a bee in one of these images for a bear, the owner responded with “please be more observant” and renamed their pronouns to (*) “bee/him” during an online practice in early 2022. Until the end of 2022, one of these images was actually a bear, holding its paws to one side while standing in the snow, but has since been changed to a picture of Wiki, a rainbow kiwi bird Beanie Boo. For ten points, name these images used on Discord for a common purpose by a certain UW Quizbowl member.

ANSWER: Isaac Olson's Discord profile pictures [accept obvious equivalents, prompt on things like "Discord profile picture" by asking who the profile picture belongs to]

One of these things focuses on an object that is first found in a forest, and at the end, washes up on a rocky beach, where it is picked up and buried under the nearby rocks. A triangle-shaped eclipse causes the sky to darken in one of these things, setting the lighting for the following scene where zombies climb out of their graves. These things often feature sequences where the same object is carried by different people, such as one where Big Bird and then Conan O'Brien run holding a (*) flag. Another one of those objects was a red bucket, which was used in one of these things for people to pour ice water on each other in succession, referencing the ALS Ice Bucket Challenge trending in 2014. An astronaut falls while screaming in one of these things, which opens with Walk off the Earth playing a cover of Gangnam Style on a single guitar before it is smashed by Psy. For ten points, name these end-of-the-year compilation videos that were discontinued after becoming some of the most disliked videos on its namesake platform.

ANSWER: YouTube Rewind

One famous single by this artist was originally called "Memento", and its B-side featured "Paper Flower" and "Cranberry and Pancake"; that single was written as the main theme to the TV drama Unnatural. This artist illustrated many of his older music videos, including one where a girl sticks her tattooed tongue out while her bloody hands wrap around her throat, and another where a girl holds an inside-out umbrella that cycles through the colours of the rainbow. Certain lyrics from the song "Jackpot Sad Girl" were written as a (*) critical response to one famous song by this artist, whose message received notable backlash from the greater Vocaloid community for implying the community's decline. That song's official English name is "DUNE", but is more famously known as "Sand Planet". For ten points, name this Japanese musician, who produces Vocaloid songs under the name Hachi and wrote very popular non-Vocaloid songs like Lemon, KICKBACK, and Peace Sign.

An endgame area in this game has 13 alternate hidden entrances that require specific actions to enter, like staring at a red grate for nine seconds or getting into a BLACK CAR underwater. Only a few NPCs in this game, like a branch coral and a cowboy who later turns into sand, are aware of the truth behind their existence. The WTF value in this game determines whether certain events happen, like an NPC saying, "I fucking love air conditioning". Watering garden patches in this game gives permanent () HEART boosts to their associated characters. The first iteration of this thing was on a scale with three discrete options. It was then expanded, then reduced down to having five options, and later expanded again. A popular xkcd comic classifies phase diagrams as one of these things. Variants of these things include ones with different structures, such as triangular ones, and ones with continuous, rather than discrete, options on a scale. Some of these things lack a scale entirely, such as the () "alternative responses to 'I love you'" meme. One variant of these things that follows its original structure made an argument for Saturn being a tea by assessing the pureness of "ingredient" and "preparation". Additions to the original one of these things include "rebel" and "moral". For ten points, name these traditionally three-by-three organizational schemes first used in DND to categorize individuals into groups based on moral beliefs, such as "Lawful Good".

ANSWER: alignment charts

Primitives are the lowest-level commands defined by the underlying engine of this software, and can be used to construct higher-level macros. In the 2e version of this software, asterisks were added to commands to indicate an alternate use. Add-on libraries like "decorations" and "arrows" were used to create one of the top ten posts of all time in the subreddit for this software. That post was my recreation of the “I meet someone, we talk, they leave” meme made with the drawing package of this software, (*) TikZ. Moderator note: Read “RARE” normally (that is just how it is formatted in-game).

The player is given the description “pain, only pain” upon entering the lowest level of an area in this game for the first time, and an NPC in the upper level of that area speaks in all lowercase and without proper punctuation. Every three days in this game, a special event at a house in the wilderness is held for players to obtain () exclusive items, with an increased number of items if Scorpius is the current mayor. Edits from the perspective of a mirror, a chair, and other objects in a scene with this character were popularized in 2021. The children of this character are susceptible to low temperatures, a weakness that was exploited to defeat them. In a scene where this character argues with their younger sibling over the fate of the protagonist, this character declares, () “You wouldn’t know responsibility if it was welded to that hammer!”. In a thirst tweet video about this character, one Twitter user said that people who aren’t horny for this character’s true dragon-like form “just aren’t strong enough”. The reveal of this female antagonist in 2021 generally led to an unfathomable amount of hornyposting and popular demands to “step on me mommy” especially after learning she was over two meters tall. A yellow version of these things was marketed only to schools in an effort to combat student theft. Despite its name implying it is an upgrade to some previous iteration, this thing was the (*) first in its series. A later version of one of these devices was criticized for its slow speed that resulted from it supporting a colour screen, as its CPU was not upgraded from its monochrome predecessors. Performance speed can be improved by overclocking these devices, and, if you are Linus Tech Tips, water-cooling them. For ten points, name this Texas Instruments graphing calculator and namesake series with a notable black-and-white design, whose later versions included the “Silver Edition” and the “CE”.

In one of these things, fish appear in increasingly unreasonable places throughout the day, including in the bath and on the bed. Another one of these things begins with the protagonists having a chicken picnic, during which one character kills a bee, causing another character to run off in tears and later meet a butterfly that he calls “a little baby pigeon”. A character in one of these videos explains there’s “only three things to do” in a particular location: making various graphs, dressing up, and dancing. In another one of these things where characters are staring at the clouds, one of them sees a () ladder leaning on a log. These videos often take place on June 19 and center around the protagonists learning about a central concept, such as the digital world, eating healthy, and time. The three-letter abbreviation for a tower (emphasize) connected to this building was renamed, potentially to avoid confusing that tower’s abbreviation with () Paccar Hall. If I had a nickel for every time a sponge-related character was confirmed asexual in a misleading way that propagated misconceptions about asexuality, I'd have two nickels, which isn't a lot, but it's weird that it happened twice. For ten points, identify some inaccurate representations of asexuality in popular media:
